The Office of Environment of the Consell de Formentera is pleased to report that roughly twenty people have shown interest in participating in the project to implement two energy communities on the island. This initiative is part of VPP4 Islands, a European project to promote innovative tech-driven renewable energies which Formentera joined in 2020. Homeowners as well as representatives of local businesses and the Hotel Federation came out for two meetings last Friday – at noon with the Intersectoral Association of Small and Medium-sized Entrepreneurs of Formentera (PIMEF) and in the afternoon with the general public.

Antoni Tur, environment councillor, described the meeting as "very constructive" and encouraged the people of Formentera to participate: "This test is a chance to move towards producing and using renewable energy, and will help to raise awareness among the population".
